2. Reasons for revision of the forecast

During the first six months (interim period) of the fiscal year ending May 31, 2025, in the Automotive Textiles and Traffic Facilities Segment, which is the Company's main business, net sales in the traffic facilities business exceeded the plan as the Company responded effectively to recovering demand for products for both railways and busses as a market leader that maintains the largest market share for over a century. On the other hand, the automotive textiles business was affected by deterioration of production efficiency at North and Central American bases due to short-term fluctuations in orders received, a significant production reduction at major customers mainly caused by the rise of new electric vehicle manufacturers in China, and a decrease in production volume by Japanese automakers on the back of social situations in Southeast Asian countries. In the Interior Fittings Segment, our efforts, including new product development and up-front investment for securing new orders, did not lead to an increase in net sales in the interim period. As a result, overall net sales for the interim period are expected to fall short of our previous forecast announced on July 12, 2024. In terms of profits, although the Company recorded a gain on sale of investment securities, profits at each level are also expected to fall short of our previous forecasts as the Company recorded a share of loss of entities accounted for using equity method and foreign exchange losses in non-operating expenses, in addition to the decrease in net sales.

Regarding the full-year consolidated financial forecast, although we expect the average yen to be weaker than planned, which is expected to contribute to both sales and profits, we are currently in the process of carefully evaluating the business environment and economic situation, including the impact of revisions to automakers' production and sales plans, and has not revised our previously announced forecast. Going forward, we will promptly disclose any revision of the forecast for the consolidated business results, if necessary.
